

University of Hawai'i at Mānoa

Hawai'i Natural Energy Institute

School of Ocean & Earth Science & Technology

Conversion of Agri-residues to Biofuel and Biobased Products

Lignocellulosic biomass and agri-residues are renewably available and supplies are abundant. These low-cost feedstocks serve as ideal feedstocks for biofuel and biobased product generation. This presentation focuses on producing bioethanol from lignocellulosic biomass and protein-rich fungal biomass from biofuel plant residues.

Samir K. Khanal

Assistant Professor

Department of Molecular Biosciences and Bioengineering

University of Hawaii at Manoa

Tuesday, September 30, 2008

3:00 – 4:00 PM

POST 723

Sponsored by

Hawai'i Natural Energy Institute

An Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action Institution